At the parliamentary debate

At the debate there was a president and five nations : Finland, Portugal, Romania, Turkey and Hungary. 😊

The debate was about children's rights. We talked about school. For example: what a teacher can do, if he can shout to a class, take the child's cellphone, search in a student's bag or call a student stupid. After that, the president of parliament read short stories, dialogues which happened at school, and we discussed them together.

It was very interesting, because we could tell our opinions about children's rights. It is also good for teens to talk about children's rights, so that they can see them from different perspectives. Besides, the discussion was effective. Each country had good ideas.
